Steve's Plants History

Steve's Plants is a family-owned company that has been around in one form or another for over 65 years. The business found its beginnings in the 1950s, along a country road near the small town of Chambersburg, PA, at the home of David Snider. While growing produce in his garden for the family, David began selling extra cucumbers and cantaloupes that the family didn't need.

In the mid-1950s, he set up a plank over some crates in the front yard to sell more produce to people who passed by. In 1957, David took early retirement from Letterkenny Army Depot and decided to go full-time into selling produce.

He rented twelve acres of land across the road to grow more produce to sell. However, the next two years were terrible drought years and the crops were basically a failure. So, David had to return to his previous job, but continued to grow produce on the side.

Not far from here, in Fayetteville, PA, he bought a fruit stand from the Raffensperger brothers on January 1, 1966. He opened up the next summer, with his brother, Harold, and son, Mike, working with him. It was then the family decided to come up with a name for the business, which had previously been known simply as David Snider and Sons Produce. Outside the new fruit stand stood a windmill, and the business had started on the farm, so the company name became "Windmill Farms." The business shifted from just produce to a regular retail farm market.

Meanwhile, his son Steve grew up working in the garden and helping with the family business, and would eventually go on to get his degree in horticulture, and return to work at the business full-time.

Before long, the family decided to build a 30x40' greenhouse behind their house, for the purpose of growing produce plants. They started with a homemade wooden frame and covered the frame with plastic to construct the first greenhouse.

On January 13, 1970, the greenhouse collapsed because of heavy snow and sleet, so they rebuilt and enlarged the greenhouse to 30x60'. They went on to construct three greenhouses in total behind the fruit stand. The first two were wooden homemade structures, and the third was a steel hoop house. A tragic fire in 1979 destroyed the backs of two of the houses, but they repaired them the next spring and continued operating.

Soon the family began selling plants--both wholesale and retail. Eventually the business morphed entirely into a wholesale plant business, and moved back to the rural road (now named Hade's Church Road), where it had begun. They moved two of the greenhouses to their property next to the road, and divided them into four greenhouses. They proceeded to build six more greenhouses, and went full time into the wholesale plant business.

When David passed away in 1988, the business continued operating as Windmill Farms Greenhouses, run by David's two sons, Joe and Steve, until the early 2000s. They shipped all kinds of starter plants around the country.

During the decades of operation, the greenhouses employed many of the local youth who worked the long summers for extra income as they helped primarily with the fall crops of chrysanthemums and cabbage and kale. As the years passed Steve and Joe decided it was time to retire. Both brothers went their separate ways, selling the business off and keeping just enough for each to continue their niche. While Joe continued growing and selling thousands of cabbage and kale plants each fall, Steve loved growing vegetables and harvesting their food to give to family and friends. This prompted him to grow vegetable plants and continue selling wholesale to local businesses.

Ten years later, his daughter in-law Holly (Who was one of the youth that worked at the greenhouses) fell in love with the business and now helps support Steve with the retail sales of his plants. Together they work to produce great quality plants for you to enjoy and harvest.

Having come full circle from the 1950s fruit stand, they began selling plants out of her front yard as a way to open up petunia baskets and vegetable plants to the local community. Then, they constructed two new greenhouses in 2021 and 2022 to expand the business even further.

We pray our selections this year will help you expand your gardening experience. God Bless!
